

Talking to Your Provider [1]

Description: This patient handout sheet discusses the importance of honesty from both the patient and the provider when talking about drug use and treatment.

Be Honest With Your Provider

Your provider wants to provide the best possible treatment for you with a treatment plan that meets your unique needs and circumstances. This can be achieved through a relationship based on honesty and good communication. Be sure to tell your provider if you:

Start taking a new prescription or over-the-counter medication

Use an opioid, such as heroin, methadone, or a prescription narcotic

Use other illicit drugs

Crave opioids or think you might be experiencing withdrawal.

These are things that could alter your treatment plan, so be sure to bring them to your provider's attention right away. Your provider cares about you and is there to listen, so don't be afraid to speak up if you have a problem or a concern.

Expect Your Provider to Be Honest With You

Just as your provider expects honesty and communication from you, you should expect the same from him or her. Your provider should discuss several issues with you before starting a treatment plan, including:

Treatment philosophy --What is your provider's approach to treatment?

Confidentiality --Who will have access to your information?

Office policy --What is the policy for missed or canceled appointments?

Prescription procedures --Will you receive take-home doses, or will you get your medication from a pharmacy?

Urine testing procedures --How often will you provide urine samples, and how will the results be interpreted? What happens if your urine sample shows that you have been using drugs?

Talking to Your Provider

Published on BupPractice (<http://www.buppractice.com>)

If your provider does not bring up these issues when starting your treatment, be sure to ask about them. Remember, open communication, trust, and honesty will help make your treatment successful.

Links:

[1] <http://www.buppractice.com/node/2640>